They knocked at the door.

The teacher nodded her approval.

The little girl stood with lowered head.

He whispered in his ear.

The man paced slowly up and down before him.

The boy ran away as fast as he could.

She motioned to him to keep away.

She gazed slowly around the room.

He looked at them out of the corners of his eyes.
She threw herself on her knees before him.
He began to walk to and from about the room.
He started rapidly toward the door.
The little child sat with folded arms.
She placed her hand on his shoulder.
His mother tenderly stroked his head.
The little boy frowned.

SERIES I

He threw the window wide open and looked in to the garden.

With a sigh of relief he stretched himself out on the sofa, and lay there looking at the ceiling with his mouth open.

He hurried to the table and rang the bell.

She gave a cry of joy and ran to the door.

She burst into a laugh and clapped her hands.

He went on tiptoe to the door and carefully opened it.

He left the room and locked the door behind him.

She shook her head sadly and smiled.

She covered her face with her hands and began to sob violently.

He took off his cap and made a low bow.

He shut his eyes and fell asleep.

He opened the door, and came in.

SERIES II

She opened the door, smoothed her hair slowly, and came in.

He went to the window, opened it a little, and peered into the street.

He closed the window, went back to his desk, and then began to walk hurriedly up and down the room.

The doctor bent over the sick man, felt his pulse with one hand, and placed the other on his forehead.

He took a key out of his pocket, opened the door, and came in.

She uttered a cry of joy, ran to her mother, and sank on her knees before her.

He put his left elbow on his knee, rested his forehead in his left hand, and began to stroke his beard with his right.

She leaned over the back of the chair, covered her face with her hands, and wept.

He went to the table, found the picture, and joyfully took it in his hands.

She took her handkerchief out of her pocket, unfolded it, and wiped the tears from her eyes.

The child was sleepy. He rested his head on his arms on the table and went to sleep.

He looked toward the door fixedly, with an expression of terror on his face, and waited for the man to come in.

SERIES III

While he was making the drawing, he kept examining the flower very carefully.

She covered her eyes with her hands, as if she was trying to collect her thoughts.

She closed her eyes so that she could feel more intensely the softness of the piece of velvet.

She looked tenderly after the little boy, till he disappeared through the door.

When he had succeeded in turning the knob without making any noise, he stealthily opened the door and peered into the room.

George held the book before his face, so that no one could see him laughing.

She walked slowly across the room and with bowed head, as though she were in great sorrow.

The old man stroked the little boy's head as though he were much amused.

"What has happened?" asked the woman anxiously.

After she had motioned to the child to be silent, the lady smilingly approached and took him by the hand.

They stopped suddenly and listened, as though wondering what it could be.

When Mary opened the door, George went to meet her with a cheery smile of welcome.

SERIES IV

The child rose from her seat, and with her face buried in her handkerchief, walked back slowly, sadly, toward the window.

He lay back in his chair, his head sunk between his shoulders, while his arms were pressed tightly across his breast, as though he were cold.

He dropped wearily into a chair, and sat there looking at the floor, his right elbow on his knee and his chin resting on his hand.

He stood at the open window, with figure erect and his hands resting on the window-sill, while deep breaths he took into his lungs the delicious fresh air that was coming into the room.

The boy lowered his head, and rubbed his forehead with his hands as though he were trying to collect his thoughts.

There she knelt, her face turned heavenward, her hands crossed in her lap, while her body drooped gently as though she were very, very tired.

When he reached the door of his house, he hastily unlocked the door, opened it, went in, and carefully locked the door again behind him; and in his eagerness to confide his secret to someone he could trust, he went down the hall calling “Mother, Mother!”

His eyes filled with tears as he went to the wall where the picture of his father hung, and there with his head resting on his arm against the wall, he sobbed bitterly.

Rizpah spread the cloth on the ground at the foot of the tree, seated herself upon it, and with her arms resting limp upon her knees, her eyes set in unutterable woe, watched the birds and thought about her lost children.

The man was lying, sprawling, on the couch, but he jumped up, ran to the door, and angrily motioned to his servant to come to him.

The old lady sat shivering near the stove, holding out her hands to get the warmth, and nervously opening and closing them so that the tips of her fingers kept rubbing her palms.

"I see," thought the boy as he stood with folded arms looking fixedly at the floor.

He took the handkerchief, examined it a moment and said: "It doesn't belong to me!"

He stooped over and picked up a pencil that was lying on the floor: "Pshaw," said he, "it is broken!"

Pecopin, feeling that all was over, threw himself face downward on the ground, and moaned: "I shall never see her again!"

On waking, Rip Van Winkle rubbed his eyes and looked around for his medicine; as he rose to walk he found himself stiff in the joints and wanting his usual agility.

The clergyman folded his hands before his breast and, bending his head above them, prayed fervently.

The girl knelt beside the fallen soldier, while with her right hand she waved her handkerchief to and fro in the air.

As the door opened, Florence ran to meet him, crying, "Oh dear, dear papa!" and she held out her arms to him; but, as he paid no attention to her, she put her handkerchief to her face and burst into tears.

Beatrice came through the door holding her shirt with one beautiful arm, while with the other she held a candlestick above her head, so that the light shone upon her face.

She advanced holding forward her head as if she would have him kiss her as he used to when she was a child; but then remembering herself, she made him a deep curtsy, sweeping down to the ground almost, looking up meanwhile with the sweetest smile.

She closed the door very carefully behind her, and then leant back against it, her hands folded before her, looking at the boy who was kneeling beside his trunk to pack it.

He took the paper and stepped to the window; then holding the sheet so that the light fell full upon it, he examined it carefully, folded it as though musing on its contents and put it into his vest pocket.

My Lord was lifting the glass to his lips, when Esmond entered; but at the sight of the familiar face, the movement of his arm ceased when the glass was on level with his chin; he held it there a moment in astonishment, then suddenly setting it on the table, he rushed toward Esmond with outstretched arms, and would almost have embraced him: “I thought you were in France,” he exclaimed.

The Prince was lying on the bed, but at the sound of the footsteps, he rose on his elbow in alarm, while he reached under the bed for his flashlight: “Who goes there?” he shouted sternly.

The child playfully drew his cap down over his eyes as though he were a very fierce bandit, and rushed into the room holding out his arms and curling his fingers like a lions claws.

As the ladies rode up, the old gentleman raised his hat and stood with bowed head till they had passed.

The young man picked up the glove from the floor, pressed it fervently to his lips, and clasped it tenderly against his bosom, as though it were a priceless treasure.

SERIES V

Dunsey threw himself into a chair by the window, drew another chair before him, threw one leg over it, and began to beat on the window-sill with the points of his fingers.

Godfrey stood with his back to the fire, moving his fingers uneasily among the contents of his side-pockets and looking at the floor.

Aaron replied by rubbing his head against his mother's skirt, passing the backs of his hands over his eyes, and peeping through his fingers at Master Marner.

Mr. Macey screwed up his mouth, leaned his head further on one side and twirled his thumbs rapidly, with his two hands resting on his lap and touching at the finger-tips.

Silas sat with his elbows on his knees, his forehead pressed rigidly into his two palms, his eyes closed, deep sighs that were almost groans shaking his slender frame.

The little tot squatted on the coat and spread out her hands to the fire; but her little eyes refused to stay open, and finally her golden head sank down upon the floor fast asleep.

Presently the child slipped from his knee and began to walk about; but suddenly she fell into a sitting posture and began to pull at her little boots, as though she were trying to get at her toes.

“At last,” he said, stretching back in the armchair, crossing his legs and joining his hands behind his legs and joining his hands behind his head: “I can now have a minute to myself!”

“Ssssh,” said the boy, frowning, and waving his right arm with hand out-spread towards his companion.

SERIES VI

As Rip Van Winkle approached the town, the people all stared at him with marks of surprise and invariably stoked their chins, so that Rip was induced involuntarily to do likewise: his beard was a foot long.

A self-important old gentleman pushed through the crowd, shoving the people to the right and left with his elbows as he passed; and planting himself before Van Winkle, with one hand on his side, the other resting on his cane, he demanded with an austere tone: “What are you doing here?”

As Rip Van Winkle told his story, the bystanders began to look at each other, nod, and wink significantly and tap their fingers against their foreheads.

An old woman came tottering forward, put her hand to her brow and peering under it into his face for a moment, exclaimed: “Sure enough, it is Rip Van Winkle!”

As the Emperor stepped into the courtyard, the ladies were all so busy crowding about the young prince, holding his hands and counting the kisses, that they did not see the old gentleman: "What's all this, what's all this?" shouted in a rage; and they all scampered off in every direction.

Trotty sat down in his chair and beat his knees and laughed; he sat down in his chair beat his knees and cried; he got out of his chair and hugged Med; he got out of his chair and hugged Richard; he got out of his chair and hugged them both at once. He was constantly getting up and sitting down, never stopping in his chair a single minute, being beside himself with joy.

"Here, little girl, can you tell us the way to town?" "That's not the way. The town is over in this direction!" But as the little girl was turning to point out the road, one of the men seized her by the waist and lifted her from the ground. Lucia looked back over her shoulder terrified and gave a shriek.

With a start, Evengeline looked wildly about her: “Where is Gabriel?” she asked dazedly. “Where is Gabriel? Where is Gabriel?” “He is on that ship that is just sailing out of the harbour!” Someone answered. For a few minutes Evengelinestood shading her eyes with her palm, gazing after the vessel, fast disappearing into the horizon. At last she spoke half aloud: “I will follow you and find you wherever they may take you, Gabriel,” she said, as though taking a vow. Then she turned to the soldier and said: “Lead on to the boat, I am coming, I am coming.”

“Give me the bow,” said Tell. Tell chose between two arrows; one he fitted to the bow-string, the other he thrust into his girdle. Then for a moment he stood, a little bowed of shoulder, with his eyes downward: he was praying. You might have heard a leaf fall, so still was the place. Then Tell raised his head; his eyes were steady, his hands had become still; his face was like iron; he brought the cross bow to his shoulder and laid his eye to the feather of the shaft: “Twang,” the apple fell. A cheer arose from the crowd. Tell laid his hand upon the arrow in his girdle. “If the first had hurt my child, he said, “this one by now would have been through your heart, O Gessler!”

SERIES VII